ALTH! HEALTH! HEALTH!

Health Restored and Life Prolonged to Suffering Humanity by the most wonderful agents ever discovered.

MYERS' GALVANIC CHAIR!

vanism, Electro-Magnetism, and other forms of electricity are now extensively employed in the best institutions of the world with the most flattering results. Th. Galvanic Chair is one of our own invention. And one of the best-constructed Electro-Magnetic Apparatus in use, with every necessary appliance for the treatment of various diseases. We receive no unpleasant shock, but a pleasant, soothing and steady current, which imparts to the whole system the vigor of health. No chair is so constructed that I can give Hot Air, Hot or Vapor Baths, which cleanses the skin and opens the pores, thereby relieving and assisting nature to remove impurities from the blood. It has been said that illness is next to Godliness, and the pores of the skin must be kept open or sickness and death are sure to follow. With my chair I can sweat the most delicate patients day and night, and give them exercise at the same time, without fatigue. I do away with all debilitating effects, by the use of the Galvanic current, I do away with all debilitating sensations of heat and shock, rendering the feebleness of the patient almost imperceptible, equalize the circulation and tone and strengthen the whole system, from the brain and nerves through all the sensory ramifications of the vascular system to the extremities and vital organs. I do not debilitate but to promote a cure, but from the concentration of my forces, I can more speedily and effectually cure chronic diseases than any other treatment. I have given many a cured testimonial to the medical effects I can produce. I have cured hundreds of cases supposed to be incurable, and with my apparatus have many times achieved cures in the hands of others, after they had failed. I have given many a sufferer occasion to rejoice, and have caused the haggard, downcast face to be lighted up under the electrifying effects of a vitalizing current of electricity sent by the pneumogastric nerve to the stomach, and I have caused many a rheumatic sufferer to run and rejoice in the restoration of painful, contracted, stiff and withered limbs. All diseases I cause more or less wonderful. In making electricity as a medical agent, I do not rely upon it to the exclusion of every other treatment, but I do it properly applied as an adjunct, with a judicious system of medication, I can shorten and sometimes cause the most obstinate cases that can be cured with other aloone. Progressive science has ever been the theorist.

INHALATION.

I have just introduced a new treatment by inhalation, by which lung diseases and catarrh cured speedily.

I HAVE NO ONE CURE-ALL,

but make a hobby of any one mode of treatment. I use electricity or medicine, or both as they may require. I believe in proving all things and holding fast to that which is good. Believing that it is a positive fact that the majority of diseases are caused by impure blood, I only way to promote a cure is to remove the poison and build up the system by regulating the natural excretory organs to do their proper duty. I find the cause, remove it, and assisted by efficient medicine properly administered, will promote a cure without fail. I am prepared with success all diseases of the Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Nerves, Brain, Womb, Blood, Bladder, affections of the Urinary Organs, Gravel, Fever, Ague, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Diseases of the Eye and Ear, etc.

TO THE LADIES.

Ladies I would say: You whose suffering have become intolerable, and who have thousand deaths from those diseases so common to your sex, give me a call, for I can cure you without fail, and make your lives one to gain worth living for. And all consultation will be strictly private and confidential.

YOUNG MEN.

Any young man who have suffered from year to year, and whose vital powers have been impaired and nervous system unstrung and broken down, and are suffering all the horrors of self-pollution and youthful follies, come and see me. I have a sure preventative of the dreary and early death. To those who, from indiscretion, have contracted private diseases and are desirous of being cured, come without fail, for I can guarantee you a cure.

CONSULTATION FREE.

Whether the sick, no matter what their diseases may be, to call and investigate for themselves before abandoning all hope, for it will cost you nothing. I give no encouragement unless it is a fair prospect of a cure. Consultation will endeavor to be candid in my opinion, and reasonable in my charges. I claim not to cure everybody, but to cure all that can be cured. I am a graduate from one of the best medical colleges in the United States, and a new thoroughly Electrician, and have had many years successful practice in the treatment of both acute and chronic diseases. To remove all doubts and convince my patients that I claim nothing but what I am, I refer to my diplomas and the numerous recommendations in my possession, which will be shown to any one on application at my office.

I am located permanently in this city, and all I ask is that you give me a fair, unbiased trial, and I hope to merit your confidence and give entire satisfaction to all suffering humanity. My reputation has been acquired by long years of hard study, and I am known by my patients. My office is permanently located at No. 44 Solomon Block, South Spring street, between First and Second streets. Hours—From 9 to 12 a. m. and 1 to 5 and 6 to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. Patients can secure board and lodging in same building. I will personally answer all letters of inquiry. All correspondents desiring an answer should enclose a postage stamp and address,

For the Pacific Coast, generally fair weather.

THE MORNING'S NEWS.

The twenty-one victims of the Brooklyn fire were buried yesterday.

A captain of the Salvation Army was brutally treated at San Jose last night.

The New York aldermen have been cited to appear before the Grand Jury on Monday.

The Secretary of the Treasury has written another letter in relation to Chinese merchants entering the United States.

George Augustus Sala sailed yesterday from London for New York, and on February 14th leaves San Francisco for Australia.

Snow in the upper part of Wyoming is causing the cattle men much trouble. Cattle are reported to be dying for want of grass.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company is likely to have a severe fight when they come to serve writs of ejectment on the squatters now occupying their Deming land.

The English Government is in receipt of discouraging news from Egypt. General Wolseley has changed his plan of operations, and Khartoum's relief is as far off as ever.

The snow blockade still continues in Oregon. One thousand men are now employed in shoveling their way to the relief of the snowed-in passengers on the Northern Pacific.

The master of the steamer Chattahoochee, which arrived at New York yesterday, reports meeting a disabled schooner fifteen miles out at sea, but owing to rough weather being unable to render any assistance.

OUR Washington letter has some gossip, more or less preposterous, about General Logan.

THE devil appears to be loose in San Jose, judging by the way our dispatches from that classic pueblo read.

THE late storm was general all over the State. In places the rainfall was very heavy, reaching to over 25 inches at one point in Nevada county.

THE New Year's edition of the TIMES will be a paper to be circulated in other parts by fifties and hundreds. It will be sold at prices so low that a churchmouse will not complain thereat.

CLEVELAND gave a reception at Albany the other night, attended by two hundred persons, mainly of the now dominant Cleveland-Manning faction. Result: a good many mad Democrats who were not invited.

THE cowboys of Texas have been bulldozing the officials of a railroad train. If the trainmen would go armed these blusterers would steer clear of them, or get jerked into eternity—or jerked beef. They are a set of cow-herds.

SAM RANDALL is going to make a Southern trip for the purpose of looking into the new iron interest of Tennessee and Alabama, which promises to develop great proportions. He may at the same time attend to the repair of his Presidential fences.

IN consequence of the preparations we are now making for the issuing of an eight-page edition of the TIMES on New Year's day—a sheet on which we are putting a great amount of labor, care and expense—the usual six-page Sunday edition is omitted to-day, and our readers are asked to content themselves with an ordinary four-page paper.

THE New York Nation, in commenting on the business outlook in the east, has this to say: "Notwithstanding the recent stoppage of a number of mills and the reduction of wages in others, there are some signs of improvement in business. All the trade journals agree upon this point. While some mills have stopped, others have resumed business. The increasing demand for good investment securities on the Stock Exchange is perhaps the best evidence of returning confidence. In the nature of things, the depression which has borne so heavily upon departments of industry during the past two years cannot last much longer."

BY far the best written and most interesting letter which Mr. Charles F. Lummis has yet sent the TIMES is printed—in part only, however—this morning. Its great length has rendered it necessary that the letter be carved in two. The remainder will appear poco tempo. It is unnecessary to remind our readers that Mr. Lummis is the enterprising and energetic gentleman who is engaged in performing the remarkable task of walking from the ancient capital of the Buckeye State—Chillicothe—to Los Angeles. It is a notable journey, and the traveler has the facility of describing his travels in a most entertaining manner. The letter printed to-day has some readable descriptions and a bit of really fine writing.

Mr. Lummis is expected to arrive in Los Angeles within thirty days—all the way by Foot & Walker's line. He scorns to patronize those bloated monopolies, the railroads, likewise the stage lines, burro trains and all such effete and effeminate methods of annihilating space. We admire his pluck.

The New Year's "Times."

The New Year's issue of the DAILY TIMES, now in course of preparation, will be a double sheet of eight full pages, filled with specially-prepared matter about Los Angeles city and county, statistical, descriptive and historical. A mass of pertinent and recent facts will be presented, and a clear and comprehensive summary of the condition, progress and prospects of this favored region will be made, to the extent of some forty columns in all. The inside sheet (four pages) will be entirely devoted to this class of matter, and will contain few or no advertisements. We shall aim to make this issue the best one for circulation at home or abroad that ever went out of this office. Fanciful, over-colored descriptions, paid "write-ups," personal advertising, gush, worn-out cuts, and other illegitimate and unreliable features, will be permitted to make no show in this number of the TIMES; but facts will be given the first place, and will mainly absorb the large space allotted them.

We shall print a large edition, and it will go off like a John-rabbit on a business trip. Therefore we would hold speech in advance with the prudent and enterprising citizen, who will of course desire to secure copies of this valuable sheet to send abroad for the enlightenment of the heathen beyond the Rockies and the benighted of strange lands beyond the sea: Grab Old Time where the wool ought to be, and see to it that your order is in the hands of the smilers of the counting-room at the earliest possible date, or you are in imminant danger of getting left on the New Year's TIMES; and to be left is to be miserable. Tempus fugit! therefore fly yourself to the embrace of the mailing clerk. He will fill you full of information and make you happy.

PERILS OF THE DEEP

A Leaking Schooner at the Mercy of the Waves.

AN ATTEMPT TO RESCUE THECREW.

Two Boats Driven Back by High Seas and the Crew of the Schooner Left to Their Fate.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—J. W. Catherine, master of the steamer Chattahooche, makes the following statement: "About 2.30 p. m., December 26th, fifteen miles north of Winter Quarter Light-Ship, I sighted a three-masted schooner under close-reefed main and mizzen sails, with her ensign union down. I bore away for her, and the vessel reported having sprung a leak, and the crew wished to be taken off. They said their boat was stove. I then placed the steamer in such a position as to shelter the schooner as much as possible, and lowered a boat in charge of my second officer. The boat returned in about an hour, failing to rescue any of the schooner's crew, because of the high sea which prevented it getting alongside. The second officer had received injuries in the boat which made it impossible for him to again attempt a rescue. Another boat's crew volunteered to make a second attempt. They were supplied with life-buoys and lines, and, after several attempts, succeeded in getting a life-buoy on the schooner. The first mate of the schooner secured himself to the buoy and jumped overboard and was picked up by the life-boat. The life-buoy was now broken and useless, as it was impossible to get very near the schooner on account of the severe gale and high sea, and as night was setting in with rain and sleet and increasing wind, which was drifting the ship into shallow water, I was compelled for the safety of my own vessel, passengers and crew to abandon the schooner, and was forced very reluctantly to put my ship to sea. The name of the ill-fated schooner was Aris Pardee. She was loaded with cement for Philadelphia. The schooner and master of the crew

The Lessons of the Season.

Nature is no blind teacher, for in the changes and transformations through which she passes are embodied some of the grandest truths and noblest lessons that it befits us to learn.

Perhaps there is nothing more clearly taught by analogy than the lesson of man's immortality. Everthing in Nature points to this, and at this season of the year, when the earth is waking from its long slumber, when the dead hills and the wasted plains are being clothed afresh in living verdure and beauty, and all things awake to a fresh resurrection, it is unnatural for man to doubtingly question, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

In the great economy of nature nothing is lost. The seed is planted in the earth; it decays, but out of that decay spring fresh life and beauty. The imperishable germ is not destroyed. The acorn drops from the bough of the old oak. Its summer life is done. No more will it be swayed by the breeze or be warmed by the sunshine. It falls like some useless thing into some quiet sepulchre of the brown earth. But there some unseen power reaches it, some force stirs the hidden germ, and as the outer shell decays and falls off it sends its roots downward into the soil, where it is fed and nourished and strengthened until it shoots up above the earth into the light, and stands, at length, a giant oak, a thing of the centuries, in whose shade generations of men come and go in long procession, laid to rest, at last, in the soil from which at first they sprang. Through the long summer not a sign of life has shown itself amid the dead grasses on the hills. The hillsides and hilltops have stood brown and bare, scorched by summer suns. We have said the grasses are dead. And so they were. But under all this death life lay hidden, waiting for the voice of resurrection. And the morning of Nature's resurrection has dawned with us. Its voice was heard in every falling raindrop of the winter's storms. The black clouds were the harbingers of life. Behind their dark veil glowed the eternal sunshine, even as behind the darkness of the grave glows the light and beauty of immortality.

It is questionable if there be any such thing as honest infidelity, for there is that planted within the soul of man, rooted, indeed, in his very being, which defies it. There is a deep-seated, hidden consciousness of the undying nature of the spirit that no false teaching, and no system of unbelief can wholly eradicate.

The restlessness of unbelief is universal, but this restlessness is not limited to the Christian era. Before the birth of Christianity ancient Greek and Roman philosophers, wearied and dissatisfied with the gods which they had worshipped, and finding in the teachings of heathenism and philosophy no satisfying rest or inspiring hope for the future, were seeking new gods at whose shrine they might kneel and find hope and comfort. Before and at the period when Christianity dawned there was everywhere a feeling of doubt and uncertainty regarding the future. All the rubbish of heathenism, all the weight of unbelief could not crush out this anxious and uncertain longing to know of man's future destiny. There was a blind groping after truth, a feeble, helpless outreaching towards the divine—the Unknown God. "What is truth?" was the solemn question of the perplexed and troubled Pilate, and all along the line of his cotemporaries was the question echoed. Cicero reviews the doctrines of various philosophers concerning the human soul and then he adds: "Which of these opinions may be true a God may know; which may be only probable is a difficult question." "Ah, if one might only have a guide to the truth," despairingly sighs Seneca. "We will wait," said Plato, for One, be it a god, or a god-inspired man, to teach us our religious duties, and as Athene in Homer says to Diomed, to take away the darkness from our eyes." And elsewhere he says: "We must lay hold of the best human opinion in order that, borne by it as on a raft, we may sail over the dangerous sea of life, unless we can find a stronger boat, or some word of God which will more surely and safely carry us."

Thus the early world with its splendid systems of philosophy, its wise and intelligent thinkers, felt itself compelled to fling aside the sophistries of its unguided reason, and reach out beyond and upward for something more satisfying and more sustaining.

It was then, when human creeds failed, and the gods of men's creation were powerless to satisfy the inherent longing of the soul—the inner, unexpressed consciousness of man's immortality, when the belief in an unknown God was struggling so to shape itself as to meet the spiritual needs of men—that Christianity was born. It was then that the world was blindly waiting for it. It recognized the confusion and hopelessness of mere human philosophy and reason, and it longed unspeakably for a Divine Revelation.

Infidelity ends in just such barrenness. It is a desert in which no human soul can thrive, where every faculty of our higher nature is starved, and dwarfed and fettered. But all the teachings of inspiration are supplemented by those of Nature. This story of life from death is no new theme to her. Her great choir of growing grasses chant it on every hillside to-day. Her vast, unnumbered hosts of opening buds, of wakening flowers, of stirring roots and hidden leaves, her untold millions of sprouting germs proclaim in voices of grandest and most harmonious prophecy the story of man's resurrection, and man's immortality.

THE demand for Blaine's book increases since his defeat. It is given out that the second volume will contain some "mighty interestin' reading" for Senator Bayard.

THE SAUNTERER.

There are genuine Sloughs of Despond outside of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. I got into one the other day, and there was no "Shining One" to help me out of it. It was on Temple street, on what is called a crossing. But the crossing exists only in the mind's eye of the street officials. But I must go down town, and there was only one way for it, and that lay across the street to the solid pavement on the other side. If I had been a mud-hen the outlook would not have disturbed me. I should have been in my native element. As it is, being in no wise related to that much-scorned scavenger of the watery flats, I did not look with delight upon the passage. But "I was in for it." Six steps out and my feet were as heavy as the average canal-boat, and about as broad. The amount of mud they took on deck would have startled a real estate man if the spot I was crossing had been in the market. Another step and my feet were both "lost to sight, though still to memory dear." There was the work of their resurrection before me. One majestic effort, which exhausted all my reserved forces, and I drew one out of the depths. But it was minus the rubber overshoe. To hunt for that rubber was like the search for the proverbial needle in the haymow. It was not to be considered. Two more steps, and the remaining rubber was lost in the depths. I left them, thinking that in the future they might serve as a sarcophagus for some delinquent Street Superintendent and his aid, who in some unwary moment might pass that way, and flounder in the muddy deep. Should they entomb them my conscience will not trouble me. It will be a just fate, a merited punishment for delinquency in office. I will set up over them a headstone bearing this solemn inscription: Requiescent in mud.

I was in a room the other day, in which was the breath of the centuries, the golden glow of the sunset, the amber and red of flaming forests, the green of summer meadows, the snow of a New England winter, the grandeur of cloud-peaks, the brightness of June blossoms, a mingling of the East and the West, while in at the open window came the light of California's December sunshine, and the balmy breath of its resurrected life. How much of the world and its history, how much of its beauty and its tragedies, how much of its broad life, how much of space can be put between the four walls of our homes if we only take advantage of that which is within our reach. Within this room I went backward almost nineteen hundred years into the thronged and busy streets of the Jewish capital. It was a grand picture by Dante—"Christ leaving the Prætorium"—which took me there. In this I saw the buildings, with their tall Corinthian columns lift themselves in stately grandeur, the monumental piles of Israel's ancient greatness. Down the broad flights of steps came the great throng who have witnessed the mockery of trial. The High Priest is there in his flowing robes of office, while the weak and cowardly Pilate stands, a troubled, anxious look upon his face, prominent amid the throng. The vast concourse of people have fallen back to make a pathway for the tried and condemned Christ. With a God-like majesty of mien he advances. Gentleness and pity and the divine tenderness of his sorrow are upon his face. The eyes of the great multitude are fixed upon him. The centurions keep back the eager crowd, all anxious to look once more into the God-like face. With bowed head and drooping form stands Judas, the betrayer, with gaze fixed upon the ground. The mother of Jesus leans upon the supporting arm of the pitying Mary Magdalene. At the foot of the steps stands the broad-shouldered Cyrenian who is to bear the cross. He holds it even now within his clasp, but its weight is heavy, and he stands as if weary. Within the crowd you catch a glimpse of a sorrowing group. It is the little band of loving disciples. Far off are the hills and the "mountains which are round about Jerusalem." The cedars lift their stately branches, and the palms droop upon the hillsides. The sky looks dark and threatening. The picture is full of character. You feel as if the universe were breathless. The tragedy of the Crucifixion seems near you. You are living centuries ago. You have taken into your life the awful, solemn scenes that attended upon your redemption. The picture is like a vision. The curtain of the past is lifted and there you stand until your ears catch the dying utterance of the crucified: "It is finished." Are there not truly centuries in this room, with the breath of Judea's hills and the glory and the sorrow of redeeming love filling them?

Beside this grand creation of Dante's is another picture, a royal painting by an American artist. It is of floating autumn forests, wrapped in the warm glow of a splendid Indian summer sunset. A soft and dreamy haze hangs like a curtain over hill and plain and river. The river is deep and still, a wonderful mirror of the overshadowing hills. The west is a sea of amber and crimson glory. The gates of the sunset are of shining gold with hinges of rubies. That sunset! It takes you back ward, and lo! you stand a child again amid New England's hills.

Beyond is a picture of Yosemite, and there you wander fancy free beneath "Cathedral Spires" and rounded domes whose summits touch the clouds. So far below them that its echo is unheard, sweeps the strong, resounding river, which giant waterfalls leap to meet. Vast cedars drop their shadows on the stream while they stand with shoulders in the upper air. You catch the breath of coniferous forests, and hear the distant murmur of the falls as you sit dreaming in this quiet room from out of which your thoughts so widely wander.

I wonder how the world at-large lived so many generations as it did without pictures—man's miniature creations of God's great breathing universe. They touch our lives with largeness; they break the chains that fetter us to place, and open for us unnumbered doors through which we may pass down the dim shadows of the past, or out into the wide and boundless realm of to-day.

Retribution.

A libertine lay in a harlot's arms
In a foolish dream of fond childhood's trust,
And revelel long in her wanton charms,
Till his soul was eated with lecherous lust.
And he mumbled: "What is the use to pray?
Not much, not much—not too much, I hope!"
And she murmured: "I'll tell you some other day,"
And her smile was as soft as the softest soap.

They lived in a Palace of marble built
By the hoarded wealth from earth's bosom wrung,
And pictures looked down from their frames of gold
From scores of walls where they gleamed and hung.
And she said: "Am I not your own dear wife?"
"My own dear wifey?—how can that be?"
And the dream was short, there was war and strife,
And a wiser and sadder old man was he.

And the lawyers came to the horrid front,
As the air was rent with the din of fight,
And they proved, as it were a lawyer's wont,
That white is black, and that black is white—
That he was a villain of deepest dye,
Lustful and lecherous-lips; and she,
With her saintly smile, and her tearful eye,
Wasn't much better than she should be.

And the millionaire's money-bags had their say,
And then collapsed in a sore affright
Like a school-boy giving himself away—
Trembling, half weeping, half right.
And so they wrangled, and claw, and yowl,
Like Kilkenny cats in the classic fight.
And "foul is fair, and fair is foul,"
And the people's verdict is, "Served him right."

The Hesperides.

Written for the SUNDAY TIMES.]

Where the sun goeth down in the West—
Where the spirits of earth find rest,
In the Occident—land of the blest,—
There dwell the Hesperides.

They are daughters of Erebus—Night;
With a nature of shadows bedight,
And they know not the Day, with his light—
These sisters Hesperides.

They are guarding the apples of gold—
Earth's gift to fond Hera of old—
And their vigils forever they hold
O'er the place of the laden trees.

And the spirits of earth and air
Know not that the sisters are there,
Or the trees with their apples so rare
In that far-away land of peace—

For darkness is over them thrown
Night claimeth the fruit for his own,
And he keepeth the great Unknown
With his shades, the Hesperides.

Oh, glorious land of the West!
Oh, land I hold dearest and best!
Elysium is near thee! peace and rest
Of fruits so enchanting as these.

Thy trees that are ever in sight
Bear apples of gold not less bright
And their guardians are angels of light
Obeying the Day's decrees.

Blest mortals who there do abide!
Of the fruit that no shadows hide
They may eat and be satisfied,
Nor fear the Hesperides.

LUMMIS'S LETTER.

Sliding Down Pike's Peak Hand Over Hand.

THE HEROIC ARGONAUTS OF THE ROCKIES.

An Episode of the Leadville of '71—Chat With a Pike's Peak Pioneer—Miners' Justice—Etc.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Dec. 21.

It hasn't been very considerate of me to leave you on top of Pike's Peak all this time, particularly at this season of the year; but the truth is I have been snowed in, myself, far from railroad or postal facilities, and from the notes to which my memory is tied down by years of habit. But after a fruitless week of waiting for the snow to emigrate, I have at last plunged through the 38 miles of deep drifts, and come down 3000 feet from winter in the mining camp of Golden to comparative summer in the valley of the Rio Grande; so we will return to our muttons.

And in the first place, let us get down from the peak, for it makes my teeth chatter just to think of that place this weather. Now, you fancy it a sort of an easy job to trot down a mountain like that; and so it is in one way—that is, it doesn't take very long. I jumped and slid the twelve miles from the summit to Manitou in an hour and 51 minutes. Nor does the descent steal your wind or overwork your pores like the ascent; but "allee samee" you will feel the effects a good deal longer. The sharp, jolting jumps of irregular length—for it is hard to use the hold-backs much on such a grade—are mighty hard on the muscles and tendons, especially those of the underside of the leg; and you are lucky if the descent doesn't lame you up for a week. Such things don't affect me nowadays, for "practice makes perfect," but I can remember very vividly the sequels of my earliest mountain climbing.

It was a warm, glorious day as I clattered down the steep and winding trail; and there was a chance to enjoy the ever-shifting wonders of the view without freezing to death. Stopped long enough at Manitou to get some indefinite but non-consolatory election news, and then cantered on to Colorado Springs, where both sides were jollifying—but with a sort of nervous, watch-over-the-shoulder-for-fear-we'll-get-hit air. There was nothing restful in the situation, and I made a break away early in the morning. It was my intention to explore the twin Cheyenne cañons—which had been commended to me as not to be missed—and by night get out 15 or 20 miles on the old railroad which runs across the mountains from the Springs to Cañon City. But here again my dearest foe, the trout, got in their work on my plans. That unmistakable brown flash in a pool of the South cañon was just as effective in holding me "thar or tharabouts" as if some one had chained Cheyenne Peak to my back. I corralled a few belated grasshoppers, and soon had a fair string of fish. Then I got caught myself. A rolling stone at the head of a ten-foot cascade gathered me in, and pitched me, with a professional twist, into the rocky, icy pool below. A dive into an ice-cream freezer couldn't have been more chilly; and worst of all was a bad sprain to my ankle. I still crawled along and tried to fish, but the frost evidently thought some one had been using dynamite, and were on the bite no longer. So I did a little more exploring of the two cañons, and departed at a dot-and-carry-one gait.

There is a fascination of their own about these twin gorges, and though they are dwarfs beside some others, the visitor to Colorado Springs should by no means neglect to visit them. I have since explored the more colossal grandeur of the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas; but the memory of South Cheyenne is higher with me quite as long. At the northern flank of Cheyenne mountain—a peak without a parallel; the only mountain in the world without a base, and thrusting its grizzly head 4000 feet out of the flat prairie—the north and south forks of Fountain Creek, split by a huge crag, come racing down the mountain ridges, cold as ice, clear as crystal, and forever white with foam from their breathless leaps. To my taste, the South Cañon is the more interesting, though there is little choice. Passing the two toll-houses—for out here everything is under lock, the beauties of nature being appreciated by the natives for revenue only—you turn the corner of a great red granite gateway, and stand in the gloomy jaws of the defile. On either hand beetle-seamed and jagged mountains of solid rock; and between their grim walls dashes the impetuous stream—too clear and effervescent to be profaned by the malarial title of creek. A short stretch of tolerably level road, and we come to a spot where the cliffs seem actually to meet and blend. Their crags, 500 feet high, are not more than thirty feet apart, and a sudden angle beyond apparently obliterates even this gap. This Titanic inner portal is the gem of the whole locality; but the entire two-mile walk to the head of the cañon is an ever-varying delight. At every step some new pinnacle, or crag, or cliff, peers down at the beholder, and the great ruddy mountains themselves change from ridges to peaks, from peaks to ridges, as the point of view is shifted. Into the upper end of the cañon the sparkling brook comes shouting down over "the Seven Falls"—a beautiful cascade in seven leaps of from ten to thirty feet each. A rude staircase scales the cliff beside the tumbling water; and on two apparently inaccessible crags 300 feet above are tiny observatories, commanding a glorious view of the surrounding country.

After a limping look at the North cañon I struck out across the plains, over irrigating ditches, wire fences, arroyos, prickly pear patches, scrub-oak thickets, and other landscape ornaments. That sprained ankle, however, made progress as painful as an assessor's visit; and when at last I struck the road some five miles from Colorado Springs, I was powerful glad to crawl into the first ranch.

It was an uncommonly interesting place into which I thus accidentally stumbled—not so much for its own sake as for that of its proprietor, a tough, battered, grizzly old miner, who has been for twenty years drilling all his time into the big ledges of the Rockies. He got home, a few minutes after my arrival, from the mountains where he had been picking away at one of his eighteen holes since last January—while his two young boys ran the ranch. One of us would grunt terribly at going up some of these peaks clad in silk tights and perspiration; but this shaggy-browed, tangled-bearded old man loads upon his thick, bent shoulders a heavy pick, three or four three-foot drills, a lot of blankets and provisions, and stumps away over the range as carelessly as if he were carrying nothing but Alice Oates' wardrobe along a plank walk.

With the observation common to these men who have had to carve their way through starvation and disappointment, through privation and suffering of every sort, among wild beasts, wilder Indians and wilder outlaws, this veteran had acquired a wonderful education, and is full of interesting reminiscences. It would do you good to hear him growl away in some tale of the days before Colorado was more than a desert; days when the three great Ute tribes—the Utes, Pintes and Tomoupaignes—were as thick as grasshoppers on these plains; when through the winter snow ot the wild mountain passes pressed a long, gaunt train of excited men, chasing their feverish dream of an Eldorado; how some struggled onward grimly under their heavy packs, while others sank down in the great white drifts and sobbed like children; how a few "struck it rich," while the forgotten thousands wore out their lives in toil, whose sole reward was barely enough to keep body and soul together. Ah! there's where the poetry and the romance of these Rocky Mountains come in. The Jenkins of the daily press can fill your ears with jingle of the Tabors, and Sharons, and Mackeys—the golden accidents of fortune. But who shall write the epic of that great heart-break, that myriad disappointment, that infinite toil and suffering and agony—the story of the unrequited multitudes? Beside that wild story, if it be ever written, the wanderings of Ulysses will seem a school-boy's recess; the roving courage of Cortes but a child's valor; and the heroism of the early martyrs, under the agony of but a day at most, a mere nothing. For these men left wives faithful as Penelopes, and never returned to them; they wandered farther and longer on blistered feet than the sage of Ithaca on his staunch galley; they pierced a stranger and a wilder land than Cortez dreamed of, and lived and died in it; and for the best long years of a rugged lifetime they suffered the rack of hunger, thirst and cold. The world has shown no parallel to the heroism that opened the Rocky Mountains to civilization—for heroism it was, though its aim was the ignoble one of wealth. The men of ancient Lacedæmon and their emasculated loves; and the strong, true, virile simplicity of blind old Homer, the only poet of all time who wrote of real men, is gone—I fear forever gone. How that grand old man of Scio's rocky isle could have set in rolling verse the story of the Pacific Argonauts! And we shall never have that story in its strength until another Homer rises to sing that Odyssey of the Rockies—the stormy wanderings of that great motley throng, the scum of great cities, the straw of the workshop and the farm; the gamblers, ministers, lawyers, loafers, bankers, thieves, merchants, beggars, college boys, cowboys, lads and old men—that plodded across the vast, bare plains, struggled wearily but hopefully up the jagged mountain sides, waded the heavy snow and icy streams, froze and starved, but never despaired. How they ran hither and yon as delusive hope blew her golden bubbles about them; how they tore up the channels of the wild mountain streams, grew bent in handling the heavy sand in long rocker or flaring gold-pan; how they dug and scraped and washed, forgetting to eat and sleep, all for the sake of the little yellow scales that might blink up at them when the clean-up came. How young men became old and bent in the feverish chase—some of them still roam, uneasy specters, through the gulches of the farthest ranges—and old men laid their weary bones to rest beside the lonely claim, the little buckskin bag of dust still clutched in their bony fingers. How men made fortunes in some golden placer and then dropped the last cent into some worthless hole. How paupers became princes, and princes paupers; and the man whose claim today was worth its hundred thousands, to-morrow turned, a beggar, to strike it again in the hills. How that heterogeneous mass of humanity—akin only in the one absorbing passion—battled with cold and hunger, with disease and death, with beasts thirsty for blood and desperate men still thirstier for gold—ah, my friends, that was the greatest, longest, strangest tragedy the world has ever known. It sends a thrill through my veins to meet out here in some lonely cabin a gray-haired remnant of those old heroes whose superhuman valor and vigor opened these western states and territories to civilization; the men whose persistent average of ill luck buried twenty dollars in the ground for every dollar's worth of "dust" that was taken from it; yet paved the way to the prosperity of solid business. But to-day they are half forgotten. The mountain brooks go rumbling unbecked to the rivers; their bars of shifting sand are unturned by the greedy shovel, and the little grains of gold beneath rest free from prying eyes. For the days of gold-washing are practically over. Placers are still worked here and there, but they are mostly in the hands of slow-going foreigners; for the restless American is now delving for the rock-bound veins from which the placer gold originally came.

Well, I stayed with the grim old miner and his boys that night, ate his bacon and potatoes, and listened to his epigrammatic talk. One little episode of the Leadville of '77 interested me particularly. You have all heard of Wm. H. Stevens, of Detroit, a wealthy mine-owner, in Leadville. In 1877, during a visit home, he bragged a good deal of his extensive enterprises, and by exaggerated accounts led 200 or 300 misguided Detroiters to return with him to Leadville. When they got there it was to find the place already crowded with unemployed men, dependent upon the charity of the miners, and starvation staring them in the face. When the miners learned the situation, they made the Detroit monopolist a characteristic call. They stretched a long rope over a cedar branch, and worked one end into a tight-fitting cravat which discommoded the Stevens neck. "Now," said they, "you fooled these men out here to starve, by your damned blowing. Give them $50 apiece to get home on, or you'll dance on nothing—less in less two minutes." The old fellow was mulish, and they had to swing him up twice and let him dangle a little; but at the third elevation he awakened and signed a check for the required amount. A man on horseback took the check and galloped away to the distant bank, and in a few days was back with the money. That was pioneer justice.

It wouldn't have been a bad scheme to apply a similar dose in another case I wot of. Not many years ago the quarter-section upon which the little city of Colorado Springs now stands was owned by a convivial Irishman called "Judge" Baldwin. Well, Gen. Palmer the genial chief who has until recently ruled, been President of the D. & R. G. R. R.—along with other land-grabbers, took a notion that here was the place for a town. They got the old, simple-hearted miner drunk, promised him a perpetual pass over the road and a corner-lot in the city-to-be; and got him to deed to them gratis the whole 160 acres. He never got so much for it all as a free ride to Manitou. This Baldwin had a strange life—strange even beyond that of the average pioneer. He had survived being scalped by savages once at his ranch on the very spot where the present natives scalp the tourist's pocket-book. He ended the romantic career in an element for which he had in life but little use. They found him one morning in a shallow well—drowned in two feet of water.

ENLARGED SHEET.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1884.

The Lessons of the Season.

Nature is no blind teacher, for in the changes and transformations through which she passes are embodied some of the grandest truths and noblest lessons that it befits us to learn.

Perhaps there is nothing more clearly taught by analogy than the lesson of man's immortality. Everthing in Nature points to this, and at this season of the year, when the earth is waking from its long slumber, when the dead hills and the wasted plains are being clothed afresh in living verdure and beauty, and all things awake to a fresh resurrection, it is unnatural for man to doubtingly question, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

In the great economy of nature nothing is lost. The seed is planted in the earth; it decays, but out of that decay spring fresh life and beauty. The imperishable germ is not destroyed. The acorn drops from the bough of the old oak. Its summer life is done. No more will it be swayed by the breeze or be warmed by the sunshine. It falls like some useless thing into some quiet sepulchre of the brown earth. But there some unseen power reaches it, some force stirs the hidden germ, and as the outer shell decays and falls off it sends its roots downward into the soil, where it is fed and nourished and strengthened until it shoots up above the earth into the light, and stands, at length, a giant oak, a thing of the centuries, in whose shade generations of men come and go in long procession, laid to rest, at last, in the soil from which at first they sprang. Through the long summer not a sign of life has shown itself amid the dead grasses on the hills. The hillsides and hilltops have stood brown and bare, scorched by summer suns. We have said the grasses are dead. And so they were. But under all this death life lay hidden, waiting for the voice of resurrection. And the morning of Nature's resurrection has dawned with us. Its voice was heard in every falling raindrop of the winter's storms. The black clouds were the harbingers of life. Behind their dark veil glowed the eternal sunshine, even as behind the darkness of the grave glows the light and beauty of immortality.

It is questionable if there be any such thing as honest infidelity, for there is that planted within the soul of man, rooted, indeed, in his very being, which defies it. There is a deep-seated, hidden consciousness of the undying nature of the spirit that no false teaching, and no system of unbelief can wholly eradicate.

The restlessness of unbelief is universal, but this restlessness is not limited to the Christian era. Before the birth of Christianity ancient Greek and Roman philosophers, wearied and dissatisfied with the gods which they had worshipped, and finding in the teachings of heathenism and philosophy no satisfying rest or inspiring hope for the future, were seeking new gods at whose shrine they might kneel and find hope and comfort. Before and at the period when Christianity dawned there was everywhere a feeling of doubt and uncertainty regarding the future. All the rubbish of heathenism, all the weight of unbelief could not crush out this anxious and uncertain longing to know of man's future destiny. There was a blind groping after truth, a feeble, helpless outreaching towards the divine—the Unknown God. "What is truth?" was the solemn question of the perplexed and troubled Pilate, and all along the line of his cotemporaries was the question echoed. Cicero reviews the doctrines of various philosophers concerning the human soul and then he adds: "Which of these opinions may be true a God may know; which may be only probable is a difficult question." "Ah, if one might only have a guide to the truth," despairingly sighs Seneca. "We will wait," said Plato, for One, be it a god, or a god-inspired man, to teach us our religious duties, and as Athene in Homer says to Diomed, to take away the darkness from our eyes." And elsewhere he says: "We must lay hold of the best human opinion in order that, borne by it as on a raft, we may sail over the dangerous sea of life, unless we can find a stronger boat, or some word of God which will more surely and safely carry us."

Thus the early world with its splendid systems of philosophy, its wise and intelligent thinkers, felt itself compelled to fling aside the sophistries of its unguided reason, and reach out beyond and upward for something more satisfying and more sustaining.

It was then, when human creeds failed, and the gods of men's creation were powerless to satisfy the inherent longing of the soul—the inner, unexpressed consciousness of man's immortality, when the belief in an unknown God was struggling so to shape itself as to meet the spiritual needs of men—that Christianity was born. It was then that the world was blindly waiting for it. It recognized the confusion and hopelessness of mere human philosophy and reason, and it longed unspeakably for a Divine Revelation.

Infidelity ends in just such barrenness. It is a desert in which no human soul can thrive, where every faculty of our higher nature is starved, and dwarfed and fettered. But all the teachings of inspiration are supplemented by those of Nature. This story of life from death is no new theme to her. Her great choir of growing grasses chant it on every hillside to-day. Her vast, unnumbered hosts of opening buds, of wakening flowers, of stirring roots and hidden leaves, her untold millions of sprouting germs proclaim in voices of grandest and most harmonious prophecy the story of man's resurrection, and man's immortality.

THE demand for Blaine's book increases since his defeat. It is given out that the second volume will contain some "mighty interestin' reading" for Senator Bayard.

THE SAUNTERER.

There are genuine Sloughs of Despond outside of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. I got into one the other day, and there was no "Shining One" to help me out of it. It was on Temple street, on what is called a crossing. But the crossing exists only in the mind's eye of the street officials. But I must go down town, and there was only one way for it, and that lay across the street to the solid pavement on the other side. If I had been a mud-hen the outlook would not have disturbed me. I should have been in my native element. As it is, being in no wise related to that much-scorned scavenger of the watery flats, I did not look with delight upon the passage. But "I was in for it." Six steps out and my feet were as heavy as the average canal-boat, and about as broad. The amount of mud they took on deck would have startled a real estate man if the spot I was crossing had been in the market. Another step and my feet were both "lost to sight, though still to memory dear." There was the work of their resurrection before me. One majestic effort, which exhausted all my reserved forces, and I drew one out of the depths. But it was minus the rubber overshoe. To hunt for that rubber was like the search for the proverbial needle in the haymow. It was not to be considered. Two more steps, and the remaining rubber was lost in the depths. I left them, thinking that in the future they might serve as a sarcophagus for some delinquent Street Superintendent and his aid, who in some unwary moment might pass that way, and flounder in the muddy deep. Should they entomb them my conscience will not trouble me. It will be a just fate, a merited punishment for delinquency in office. I will set up over them a headstone bearing this solemn inscription: Requiescat in mud.

I was in a room the other day, in which was the breath of the centuries, the golden glow of the sunset, the amber and red of flaming forests, the green of summer meadows, the snow of a New England winter, the grandeur of cloud-peaks, the brightness of June blossoms, a mingling of the East and the West, while in at the open window came the light of California's December sunshine, and the balmy breath of its resurrected life. How much of the world and its history, how much of its beauty and its tragedies, how much of its broad life, how much of space can be put between the four walls of our homes if we only take advantage of that which is within our reach. Within this room I went backward almost nineteen hundred years into the thronged and busy streets of the Jewish capital. It was a grand picture by Dante—"Christ leaving the Praetorium"—which took me there. In this I saw the buildings, with their tall Corinthian columns lift themselves in stately grandeur, the monumental piles of Israel's ancient greatness. Down the broad flights of steps came the great throng who have witnessed the mockery of trial. The High Priest is there in his flowing robes of office, while the weak and cowardly Pilate stands, a troubled, anxious look upon his face, prominent amid the throng. The vast concourse of people have fallen back to make a pathway for the tried and condemned Christ. With a God-like majesty of mien he advances. Gentleness and pity and the divine tenderness of his sorrow are upon his face. The eyes of the great multitude are fixed upon him. The centurions keep back the eager crowd, all anxious to look once more into the God-like face. With bowed head and drooping form stands Judas, the betrayer, with gaze fixed upon the ground. The mother of Jesus leans upon the supporting arm of the pitying Mary Magdalene. At the foot of the steps stands the broad-shouldered Cyrenian who is to bear the cross. He holds it even now within his clasp, but its weight is heavy, and his stands as if weary. Within the crowd you catch a glimpse of a sorrowing group. It is the little band of loving disciples. Far off are the hills and the "mountains which are round about Jerusalem." The cedars lift their stately branches, and the palms droop upon the hillsides. The sky looks dark and threatening. The picture is full of character. You feel as if the universe were breathless. The tragedy of the Crucifixion seems near you. You are living centuries ago. You have taken leap for your life, the awful, solemn scenes that attended upon your redemption. The picture is like a vision. The curtain of the past is lifted and there you stand until your ears catch the dying utterance, "It is finished!" of the Nazarene. Are there not truly centuries in this room, with the breath of Judea's hills and the glory and the sorrow of redeeming love filling them?

Beside this grand creation of Dante's is another picture, a rural painting by an American artist. It is of flaming autumn forests, wrapped in the warm glow of a splendid Indian summer sunset. A soft and dreamy haze hangs like a curtain over hill and plain and valley. The river is at rest still, a wonderful mirror for the overshadowing hills. The west is a sea of amber and crimson glory. The gates of the sunset are of shining gold with hinges of rubies. That sunset! It takes you back ward, and let you stand a child again amid New England's hills.

Beyond is a picture of Yosemite, and there you wander fancy free beneath "Cathedral Spires" and rounded domes whose summits touch the clouds. So low down that the echo of your tread, unheard, sweeps the strong, rushing river, which giant waterfalls leap to meet. Vast cedars drop their shadows on the stream while they stand with shoulders in the upper air. You catch the breath of coniferous forests, and hear the distant murmur of the falls as you sit dreaming in this quiet room from out of which your thoughts so widely wander.

I wonder how the world at-large lived so many generations as it did without pictures—man's miniature creations of God's great breathing universe. They touch our lives with largeness; they break the chains that fetter us to place, and open for us unnumbered doors through which we may pass down the dim shadows of the ages, or out into the wide and boundless realm of to-day.

Retribution.

A libertine lay in a harlot's arms
In a foolish dream of fond childhood's trust,
And revised long in her wanton charms,
Till his soul grew satiate with lecherous lust.
And he mumbled: "What is to-per-day—
Not much, not much—not too much, I hope!"
And she murmured: "I'll tell you some day,
And her smile was as soft as the softest soap.

They lived in a Palace of marble built
By the hoarded wealth from earth's bosom wrung,
And pictures looked down from their frames of gold
From scenes of walls where they gleamed and hung.
And she said: "Am I not your own dear wife?"
"My own dear wife?—how can that be?"
And the dream was short, there was war and strife,
And a wiser and sadder old man was he.

And the lawyers came to the horrid front,
As the air was rent with the din of fight,
And they proved, as it ever is lawyer's wont,
That white is black, and that black is white—
That he was a villain of deepest dye,
Lustful and lecherous-lipt, and she,
With her saintly smile, and her tearful eye,
Wasn't much better than she should be.

And the millionaire's money-bags had their say,
And then collapsed in a sore affright
Like a school-boy giving himself away—
Visibly scared—half ready for flight.
And so they wrangle, and claw, and yowl,
Like Kilkenny cats in the closing fight.
And "foul is fair, and fair is foul,"
And the people's verdict is, "Served him right,"
Los Angeles, Dec. 27, 1884. ANONAUS.

The Hesperides.

Written for the SUNDAY TIMES.]

Where the sun goeth down in the West—
Where the spirits of earth find rest,
In the Occident—land of the blest,—
There dwell the Hesperides.

They are daughters of Erebus—Night;
With a venture of endless delight,
And they know not the Day, with his light—
Those sisters Hesperides.

They are guardians of the apples of gold—
Earth's gift to fond Hera of old—
And their vigils forever they hold
O'er the place of the fallen Ideo.

And the spirits of earth and air
Know not that the sisters are there,
Or the trees with their apples so rare
In that far-away land of peace—

For darkness is over them thrown
Night claimeth the fruit for his own,
And he keepeth the great Unknown
With his shadow, the Hesperides.

Oh, glorious land of the West!
Oh, land I hold dearest and best!
Elysium is not there contained
Of fruits so enchanting as these.

Thy trees that are ever in sight
Bear apples of gold not less bright
And their guardians are angels of light
Obeying the Day's decrees.

Blest mortals who there do abide!
Of the fruit that no shadows hide
They may eat and be satisfied,
Nor fear the Hesperides.

LUMMIS'S LETTER.

Sliding Down Pike's Peak Hand Over Hand.

THE HEROIC ARGONAUTS OF THE ROCKIES.

An Episode of the Leadville of '77—Chat With a Pike's Peak Pioneer—Miners' Justice—Etc.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., Dec. 21.

It hasn't been very considerate of me to leave you on top of Pike's Peak all this time, particularly at this season of the year; but the truth is I have been snowed in, myself, far from railroad or postal facilities, and from the notes to which my memory is tied down by years of habit. But after a fruitless week of waiting for the snow to emigrate, I have at last plunged through the 38 miles of deep drifts, and come down 3000 feet from winter in the mining camp of Golden to comparative summer in the valley of the Rio Grande; so we will return to our muttons.

And in the first place, let us get down from the peak, for it makes my teeth chatter just to think of that place this weather. Now, you fancy it a sort of an easy job to trot down a mountain like that; and so it is in one way—that is, it doesn't take very long. I jumped and slid the twelve miles from the summit to Manitou in an hour and 51 minutes. Nor does the descent steal your wind or overwork your pores like the ascent; but "allee samee" you will feel the effects a good deal longer. The sharp, jolting jumps of irregular length—for it is hard to use the hold-backs much on such a grade—are mighty hard on the muscles and tendons, especially those of the underside of the leg; and you are lucky if the descent doesn't lame you up for a week. Such things don't affect me nowadays, for "practice makes perfect," but I can remember very vividly the sequels of my earliest mountain climbing.

It was a warm, glorious day as I clattered down the steep and winding trail; and there was a chance to enjoy the ever-shifting wonders of the view without treezing to death. Stopped long enough at Manitou to get some indefinite but non-consolatory election news, and then cantered on to Colorado Springs, where both sides were jollifying—but with a sort of nervous, watch-over-the-shoulder-for-fear-we'll-get-hit air. There was nothing restful in the situation, and I made a break away early in the morning. It was my intention to explore the twin Cheyenne cañons—which had been commended to me as not to be missed—and by night get out 15 or 20 miles on the old railroad which runs across the mountains from the Springs to Cañon City. But here again my dearest foe, the trout, got in their work on my plans. That unmistakable brown flash in a pool of the South cañon was just as effective in holding me "that or thereabouts" as if some one had chained Cheyenne Peak to my neck. I corraled a few belated grasshoppers, and soon had a fair string of fish. Then I got caught myself. A rolling stone at the head of a ten-foot cascade gathered me in, and pitched me, with a professional twist, into the rocky, icy pool below. A dive into an ice-cream freezer couldn't have been more chilly; and worst of all was a bad sprain to my ankle. I still crawled along and tried to fish, but the trout evidently thought some one had been using dynamite, and were on the bite no longer. So I did a little more exploring of the two cañons, and departed at a dot-and-carry-one gait.

There is a fascination of their own about these twin gorges, and though they are dwarfs beside some others, the visitor to Colorado Springs should by no means neglect to visit them. I have since explored the more colossal grandeur of the Grand Cañon of the Arkansas; but the memory of South Cheyenne will linger with me quite as long. At the northern flank of Cheyenne mountain—a peak without a parallel; the only mountain in the world without a base, and thrusting its grizzly head 4000 feet out of the flat prairie—the north and south forks of Cheyenne creek split by a huge crag, come racing down the mountain ridges, cold as ice, clear as crystal, and forever white with foam from their breathless leaps. To my South Dakota notion is the more interesting, though there is little choice. Passing the two toll-houses—for out here everything is under lock, the beauties of nature being appreciated by the natives for revenue only—you turn the corner of a great red granite gateway, and stand in the gloomy jaws of the defile. On either hand beetle-scarred and jagged mountains of solid rock; and between these grim walls dashes the impetuous stream—too clear and effervescent to be profaned by the malarial title "mountain trout." A short stretch of tolerably level road, and we come to a spot where the cliffs seem actually to meet and blend. Their crags, 500 feet high, are not more than thirty feet apart, and a sudden angle beyond apparently obliterates even this gap. This Titanic fissure portal is the gem of the whole locality; but the entire two-mile walk to the head of the cañon is an ever-varying delight. At every step some new pinnacle, or crag, or cliff, peers down at the beholder, and the great rocky mountains themselves change from ridges to peaks, or from peaks to ridges, as the point of view is shifted. Into the upper end of the cañon the sparkling brook comes shouting down over the "Seven Falls"—a series of cascade in the space of seven leaps of from ten to thirty feet each. A rude staircase scales the cliff beside the tumbling water; and on two apparently inaccessible crags 300 feet above are tiny observatories, commanding a glorious view of the surrounding country.

After a limping look at the North cañon I struck out across the plains, over irrigating ditches, wire fences, arroyos, prickly pear patches, scrub-oak thickets, and other landscape ornaments. That sprained ankle, however, made progress as painful as an assessor's visit; and when at last I struck the road some five miles from Colorado Springs, I was powerful glad to crawl into the first ranch.

It was an uncommonly interesting place into which I thus accidentally stumbled—not so much for its own sake as for that of its proprietor, a tough, battered, grizzly old miner, who had been for twenty years drilling all his time into the big ledges of the Rockies. He got home, a few minutes after my arrival, from the mountains where he had been packing away at one of his eighteen holes since last January—while his two young boys ran the ranch. One of us would grunt terribly at going up some of these peaks clad in silk tights and perspiration; but this shaggy-browed, tangled-bearded old man looks upon his thick, bare shoulders a heavy pick, three or four three-foot drills, a lot of blankets and provisions, and stumps away over the range as carelessly as if he were carrying nothing but Alice Oates' wardrobe along a plank walk.

With the observation common to these men who have had to carve their way through starvation and disappointment, through privation and suffering of every sort, among wild beasts, wilder Indians and wildest outlaws, this veteran had acquired a cheerful effusiveness, and is full of interesting reminiscences. It would do you good to hear him growl away in some tale of the days before Colorado was more than a desert; days when the three great Ute tribes—the Utes, Pi-utes and Uncompahgres—were as thick as grasshoppers on these plains; when through the winter snow of the wild mountain passes pressed a long, gaunt train of excited men, chasing their feverish dream of an Eldorado; how some struggled onward grimly under their heavy packs, while others sank down in the great white drifts and sobbed like children; how a few "struck it rich," while the forgotten thousands wore out their lives in toil, whose sole reward was barely enough to keep body and soul together. Ah! there's where the poetry and the romance of these Rocky Mountains come in. The Jenkins of the daily press can fill your ears with jingle of the Tabors, and Sharons, and Mackeys—the golden accidents of fortune. But who shall write the epic of that great heart-break, that myriad disappointment, that infinite toil and suffering and agony—the story of the unrequited multitudes? Beside that wild story, if it be ever written, the wanderings of Ulysses will seem a school-boy's recess; the roving courage of Cortes but a child's valor; and the heroism of the early martyrs, under the agony of but a day at most, a mere nothing. For these men left wives faithful as Penelopes, and never returned to them; they wandered farther and longer on blistered feet than the sage of Ithaca on his staunch galley; they pierced a stranger and a wilder land than Cortez dreamed of, and lived and died in it; and for the best long years of a rugged lifetime they suffered the rack of hunger, thirst and cold. The world has shown no parallel to the heroism that opened the Rocky Mountains to civilization—for heroism it was, though its aim was the ignoble one of wealth. The men of ancient Lacedemon might have been the peers of the forty-niners, with development—they were made of the right stuff, but it was never brought out by such surroundings. Our gilt-edged poets cling to their babbling brooks, their soft landscapes and their emasculated loves; and the strong, true, virile simplicity of blind old Homer, the only poet of all time who wrote of real men, is gone—I fear forever gone. How that grand old man of Scio's rocky isle could have set in rolling verse the story of the Pacific Argonauts! And we shall never have that story in its strength until another Homer rises to sing that Odyssey of the Rockies—the stormy wanderings of that great motley throng, the scum of great cities, the sinew of the workshop and the farm; the gamblers, ministers, lawyers, loafers, bankers, thieves, merchants, beggars, college boys, cowboys, lads and old men—that plodded across the vast, bare plains, struggled wearily but hopefully up the jagged mountain sides, waded the heavy snow and icy streams, froze and starved, but never despaired. How they ran hither and yon as delusive hope blew her golden bubbles about them; how they tore up the channels of the wild mountain streams; grew bent in handling the heavy sand in long rocker or flaring gold-pan; how they dug and scraped and washed, forgetting to eat and sleep, all for the sake of the little yellow scales that might chink up at them when the clean-up came. How young men became old and bent in the feverish chase—some of them still roam, uneasy specters, through the gulches of the farthest ranges—and old men laid their weary bones to rest beside the lonely claim, the little buckskin bag of dust still clutched in their bony fingers. How men made fortunes in some golden placer and then dropped the last cent into some worthless hole. How paupers became princes, and princes paupers; and the man whose claim today was worth its hundred thousands, to-morrow turned, a beggar, to strike it again in the hills. How that heterogeneous mass of humanity—akin only in the one absorbing passion—battled with cold and hunger, with disease and death, with beasts thirsty for blood and desperate men still thirstier for gold—ah, my friends, that was the greatest, longest, strangest tragedy the world has ever known. It sends a thrill through my veins to meet out here in some lonely cabin a gray-haired remnant of those old heroes whose superhuman valor and vigor opened these western states and territories to civilization; the men whose persistent average of ill luck buried twenty dollars in the ground for every dollar's worth of "dust" that was taken from it; yet paved the way to the prosperity of solid business. But to-day they are half forgotten. The mountain brooks go tumbling unchecked to the rivers; their bars of shifting sand are unturned by the greedy shovel, and the little grains of gold beneath rest free from prying eyes. For the days of goldwashing are practically over. Placers are still worked here and there, but they are mostly in the hands of slow-going foreigners; for the restless American is now delving for the rock-bound veins from which the placer gold originally came.

Well, I stayed with the grim old miner and his boys that night, ate his bacon and potatoes, and listened to his epigrammatic talk. One little episode of the Leadville of '77 interested me particularly. You have all heard of Wm. H. Stevens, of Detroit, a wealthy mine-owner, in Leadville in '77, during a visit home, he bragged a good deal of his extensive enterprises, and by exaggerated accounts led 200 or 300 misguided Detroiters to return with him to Leadville. When they got there it was to find the place already crowded with unemployed men, dependent upon the charity of the miners, and starvation staring them in the face. When the miners learned the situation, they made the Detroit monopolist a characteristic call. They fetched a long rope over a cedar branch, and worked one end into a tight-fitting cravat which discommoded the Stevens neck. "Now," said they, "you fooled these men out here to starve, by your damned blowing. Give them $50 apiece to get home on, or you'll dance on nothing in less'n two minutes." The old fellow was mulish, and they had to swing him up twice and let him dangle a little; but at the third elevation he awakened, and signed a check for the required amount. A man on horseback took the check and galloped away to the distant bank, and in a few days was back with the money. That was pioneer justice.

It wouldn't have been a bad scheme to apply a similar dose in another case I wot of. Not many years ago the quarter-section upon which the little city of Colorado Springs now stands was owned by a convivial Irishman called "Judge" Baldwin. Well, Gen. Palmer, the genial shark who has until recently onsted, been President of the D. & R. G. R. R.—along with other land-grabbers, took a notion that here was the place for a town. They got the old, simple-hearted miner drunk, promised him a perpetual pass over the road and a corner-lot in the city-to-be; and got him to deed to them gratis the whole 160 acres. He never got so much for it all as a free ride to Manitou. This Baldwin had a strange life—strange even to be typical of the average pioneer. He had survived being scalped by the Utes once at his ranch on the very spot where the present natives scalp the tourist's pocket-book. He ended this romantic career in an element for which he had in his little nature, they found him, one morning, in a shallow well—drowned in two feet of water.

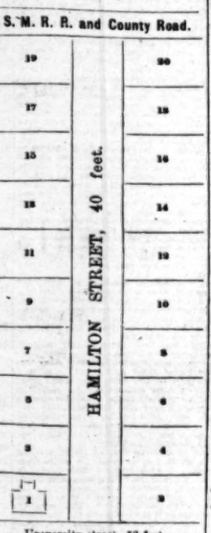
REAL ESTATE.

Homes for the People!

A NEW HOUSE, with half acre lot, worth $2500, for $1500. Who will get it?

S. M. R. R. and County Road.



University street, 50 feet.

When all the suburbs of the city are so desirable for residence, strangers coming here to locate find it difficult to choose between them. Most old residents, however, give the Southwesterly part the preference. There are several reasons for this, which will be seen by reading the following description of the above plat of land:

This plat is located just outside of the city limits in a south and westerly direction, and is situated three-quarters of a mile west of the University settlement, and the Agricultural Park; and is bounded on the south by the Santa Monica Railroad, on the north by University street—A 50 foot public street next to, and running parallel with Jefferson street—and on the east and west by land of other parties, being a portion of the well known Howes fruit ranch.

Hamilton street, as shown on the plan, is 40 feet wide and runs directly through the center of the lot from north to south. It will be graded at the expense of the present owner. The soil being a rich sandy loam, the location is comparatively free from dust and mud. The soil being very rich and fine is well adapted to growing all kinds of vegetables. The sweet potatoes grown here are remarkably fine, and all other kinds of vegetables do well. An abundance of pure soft water may be found from 15 to 20 feet from the surface, and at the driest time of the year the soil is moist to within one foot of the surface. Fruit trees require no irrigation. One very important reason why the southwesterly part of our suburbs is the most desirable for residence is a sanitary one. The prevailing winds coming from that direction, all noxious gases and odors from sewer cesspools or manufacturing establishments are carried from you.

This plat of land, as shown above, contains ten acres, less the streets, and is subdivided into 20 equal parts. Each lot, excepting the two fronting on the railroad, contains from 50 to 75 fine healthy fruit trees, 8 years of age, and all in full bearing. These trees were selected with the greatest care, and are of the most desirable varieties of deciduous fruits, such as apples, pears, peaches, plums, French and Hungarian prunes, etc. There are also several hundred grapevines of nearly every choice variety. Lot No. 1 has upon it a new house, just erected at a cost of $2000, containing seven rooms and bath on first floor and storage room above. Lot No. 3 has fine new hennery, with enclosed yard. The other lots have only fruit trees and vines; some, of course, more valuable than others.

The cheapest city lot offered in this neighborhood sells for $300 each. Bare land with no improvements has been sold in this immediate visinity, within three months, in 5 and 10 acre lots, at $500 per acre; and experts, who have examined this property, estimate the trees alone to be worth from $500 to $600 per acre. Each lot is sufficiently large, after erecting a dwelling house and outbuildings, to furnish fruit and vegetables for an ordinary family, and may, at any future time, be subdivided into 3 ordinary city lots, which will undoubtedly sell for $500 each within two years, at the present rate at which property is advancing in this location.

In order to give each purchaser an equal chance to obtain the most desirable lot, the property will be disposed of by subscription, and the choice of lots drawn for at the time of distribution. A uniform price of $500 will be charged for each lot, including lot No. 1 with the house, $50 to be paid upon signing the subscription paper, which amount will be deposited in bank in this city, in trust for the completion of the sale—$50 to be paid when the distribution of lots (on or before April 1, 1885) is made, and $50 semi-annually thereafter, with interest at 8 per cent. until the full amount is paid, or the whole may be paid at once, and a clear deed given.

Parties purchasing one or more of these lots who do not wish to improve at once, can lease each lot for $30 per annum for the fruit. The title to this property is perfect.

For further information and to sign subscription paper, apply daily, from 10 to 2, at 124 Second street, Hollenbeck building, at entrance to Metropolitan Dining Rooms.

There are few, if any, superior houses in East Los Angeles than the one at 223 Chestnut street, which John C. Bell sells at auction on Wednesday next, without reserve. A credit sale, at 9¼ per cent per annum; near the fashionable Downey avenue. Look in another column.

Parties wishing mules will do well to call upon H. W. Ogle at Chino ranch.

S. T. Owen, a young man not familiar with the "lay of the land," got on the Arizona express as it was pulling out yesterday, intending to ride up to the old depot. As the train rounded the curve and approached the bridge over the river he realized his mistake and jumped from the rear coach. Alighting in the mud broke his fall somewhat, but the reckless young man was bruised considerably and bespattered liberally with mud.

An Anniversary.

Saturday was the sixtieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Siar, of No. 61 Rosas street. A number of their friends, under the leadership of Miss E. S. Roe, determined to celebrate the occasion by a well-arranged and successfully carried out surprise party. Mr. Siar, who was absent from home, was written to and agreed to return before the 27th, being told of the intended surprise. The gentleman, however, failed to get home, and Mrs. Siar was left to receive their guests alone. Before ten o'clock the pleasant parlors were well filled and many were the sincere congratulations extended the happily surprised hostess. The evening was enjoyably spent in social chat, with music and dancing. An elegant collation was served at eleven o'clock, and the reluctant "good night" being said shortly after midnight.

Deaths.

On Friday afternoon D. H. Hartwell, aged seventy-one years, died at his residence at Pasadena. The remains were brought to this city to be embalmed by Undertaker Brown, and will be sent to Marshalltown, Iowa, for burial, the deceased's former home.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Ball, aged two months, died yesterday afternoon at No. 40 Ann street.

The remains of George H. Hall, who died in this city on December 7th, after being embalmed by McBrainey and Todd, were expressed yesterday to Philadelphia, to be buried. The remains were accompanied by the wife of the deceased.

An Insane Man.

Fremont Schroder, an insane man, was yesterday taken in charge by Sheriff Currier and Deputy Huber. Schroder was in bed at the time of his arrest, and threatened to kill any one who approached him, and it was only after a severe struggle that he was overpowered. He has been in the asylum three times, and has heretofore been released, as his insanity was only thought to be of a temporary nature. He will be taken to Stockton by Deputy Sheriff Huber to-day.

The Emerald Club.

A new club, bearing the above title, has been organized by a number of well-known gentlemen of this city, and rooms have been secured in the Jones block, and are now being fitted up for occupancy. The object of the club is of a social and literary nature, and the rooms are intended to be a pleasant rendezvous for members and their friends. Magazines and newspapers will be supplied, and no liquors will be allowed on the premises. The club starts in with fifty-two charter members.

The Blokers.

Pat Miles, one of the noisy prisoners of Friday night, was fined $30 for his fun. The fine was paid and he was discharged. Frank Rodgers, in addition to the charge of disturbing the peace, hah that of resisting an officer placed against his name. He was brought before Justice Morgan yesterday morning and fined $75. Not being able to pay the fine he was ordered to jail for seventy-five days.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

Special Premium Offered for The Weekly Mirror.

In order to immediately increase the circulation of the LOS ANGELES WEEKLY MIRROR in the East, where it is eagerly read, we have decided to make the following Extraordinary Offer: Every person who will subscribe for the MIRROR for one year, to be sent to any person outside of Los Angeles county, will receive from us a handsome box of PURE CALIFORNIA CRYSTALLIZED FRUIT, which they can also send by mail to Eastern friends. Send or bring in your orders at once.

THE TIMES-MIRROR CO.

Progress of the Sale of the Childs Tract Lots.

At the agency of these popular lots they will soon be entering on the last one hundred, and it may be confidently said that the books will close in a few weeks, and that the division of lots by the lot-holders will take place in May. The homestead plan adopted is the one that has been the most successful in the Eastern and in the Western States. There is not a lot on the tract that is not worth the $600 on two years' credit, and that without interest. The drawing of the names of the lot-holders for precedence of choice of location is the only fair method on which a homestead can be divided. Sale of lots by premium debars the poor man from competition with his rich neighbor, while the plan on which the Childs tract is divided gives to each lot-holder the same opportunity alike to choose his own location. All persons who are desirous of obtaining these lots at less than half the price others are asking around them are invited to call at the agency and read for themselves the agreement. Carriages are ready at all times at 273 North Main street to convey them over any portion of this beautiful tract, and then let them exercise their own judgment as to purchasing. A contract for six masts with electric lights has been made, at a cost of $15,000; and the moment the weather permits the work on all the streets will be vigorously prosecuted. None of the improvements are chargeable to the lot-holders. The city water mains have been placed already on Twelfth street at Mr. Childs' cost. In fact, nothing will be left undone to show that this is no money-getting operation, but that the tract will be as promised—transformed into the most beautiful residence quarter of Los Angeles. Health is found there, as shown by the families of the present residents, and good drainage is being secured for every street. The streets are all sixty feet wide and the alleys twenty feet. The blocks are short blocks of three hundred and twenty feet, with alleys between.

A HOMELESS BOY.

Result of the Kindness of Two Gentlemen.

On Christmas night, when fires were burning brightly and all was snug and comfortable in the homes of the well-to-do of Los Angeles, a poorly dressed, cold and hungry boy stood in a doorway opposite the Pico. Partially sheltered from the rain he looked pleadingly into the faces of those who hurried past. During the half hour that he kept his position, he made no attempt to attract attention by speaking to anyone.

A gentleman who was stopping at the Pico noticed the boy's dejected manner, and watched him a while, thinking at first that he was begging on the street. Soon the gentleman crossed the street, and walked by where the other was standing. The boy looked at him, steadily and earnestly, but did not speak. Twice more the gentleman turned and came by the boy. Each time a sad, pleading face was turned to him. The gentleman stopped, and asked the boy if he lived in Los Angeles. His kind tone seemed to win the boy's confidence and he at once told the gentleman his story. His name, he said, was Elmer Rickets. His mother died a few months ago at their home near Fresno, and after her death his step-father drove the boy away from home. He is but 14, and could not find work there for the winter, so left for Los Angeles and walked all the way. At Bakersfield he worked three weeks. He had seven dollars when he left Fresno, and earned a little more in Bakersfield, and had bought something to eat along the road. He stated with a good deal of pride that he had never begged. He reached the outskirts of town before dark and came on up to where the streets were lighted. He had only twenty cents left in his pocket and did not know where he would sleep. The gentleman is a traveling man and has a family of children of his own, and the destitute condition of this boy touched him. He said he would take care of the boy until the authorities could be seen, and took his new charge to a restaurant and gave him a good Christmas dinner. He was then provided with a comfortable room at a lodging house on Wilmington street. On Friday morning the kind traveling man interested a prominent merchant in his protegé and between them, during the day, they found a fruit farm, near Los Angeles, who lives east of town, and he agreed to give Elmer a good home in return for his work.

ODD FELLOWS.

Awakening Interest in Odd Fellowship.

Notice has already appeared in the TIMES of the arrival of Grand Master Edward P. Smith, of Oakland. He is making an official tour of inspection of the lodges and encampments throughout the State, and is assisted by the Grand Secretary of the I. O. O. F. of California, W. B. Lyon, Past Grand C. W. Weston of San Francisco, and Past Grand A. D. Smith of Oakland.

The official visitation of Grand Master Smith is conducted upon the same plan as that of his predecessor, Grand Master W. W. Morrow (now Congressman-elect from San Francisco) during his term, and which was productive of such satisfactory results, awakening, as it did, a new interest in the work of the powerful order of Odd Fellows. During the visitation the work of the order will be exemplified as it has been done before the Grand Lodge, and the Odd Fellows of this city should not fail to attend the service of these fraternal meetings.

Last night a meeting of the Orange Grove Encampment, No. 31, was held, and the Royal Purple degree was conferred by regular officers of the Encampment in the presence of the visiting Grand officers. To-morrow at 10 o'clock there will be a meeting of the members of subordinate lodges, for the purpose of receiving instruction in the work of the Initiatory degree.

Real Estate Bargains.

Persons in search of a home or for property for investment, are requested to examine the remarkable list of property advertised by Mr. F. H. Barclay in to-day's TIMES. Probably no such list of bargains has ever been offered in this city. If the particular kind of property desired is not included in Mr. Barclay's advertisement, we can assure all buyers that if it can be had at all, it will be found on his books. Persons intending to buy, will be shown any property desired, as four conveyances are kept for this purpose. Special attention is given to exchanging properties and to making investments which are safe and profitable.
